

Wax On: Third Grade Class Dresses Up as the Famous

Every year the third graders spend part of the third marking period reading biographies and learning about famous people in history.

During this time each child is given a famous person from history to read and research.

Then each child writes about his or her famous person in an autobiographical way. To end this study, each child dresses as the famous person and reads that person's story at a living wax museum. This year's wax museum was an overwhelming success. Some of the people featured were Helen Keller, Jackie Robinson, Ben Franklin, Pocahontas, and Thomas Jefferson.
